When determining what and how much can be copied from the Internet, it is recommended that the multimedia guidelines, print guidelines for books and periodicals, and all four criteria for fair use be applied. Those are the best guidelines available now to help determine if an instance of copying from the Internet is allowable. Just because information is on the Internet, doesn't mean that you have the right to use it anyway you want. Just because information is on the Internet, doesn't mean that it is public domain.
